Seldom have state elections been looked forward to with as great interest as they have this year, and notably those which will take place next Tuesday. The doctrine of the protection of American industry is on trial in a different manner from any of its previous trials before an American popular jury. It comes up with an amendment providing for a reciprocal trade with other countries, which may be tantamoun to a partial free trade. It is safe to say that if the states of Ohio, Iowa and Massachusetts are saved to the republicans this year their salvation will be due largely to the reciprocity program. The history of politics for the last six or eight years, at least, shows that the people are not infatuated with the doctrine of extreme or high protection unrelieved. But it also shows that the principle of moderate protection, with an outlet for our products, is held by a majority with increasing belief in its efficacy as a means both of raising revenue and of private profit and general advantage. Of hardly secondary importance is the closely related question of the currency. There has been some effort of the two old parties to settle within their respective organizations the internal differences that exist east and west, north and south, on the free coinage of silver. Practically these parties are alike in principle in New York and Massachusetts. In Iowa and Ohio the democratic platform deliverances have been at variance with their party platforms in the cast, for while the latter have laid large stress on "honest" money the former have embraced the doctrine of free silver with great effusiveness. Nevertheless, it is to be noticed that Gov. Campbell, the democratic leader in the buckeye state, has not waged his campaign on the issue laid down by the convention of his party. Therefore, if he be successful next Tuesday the victory cannot with propriety be claimed by the free coinage men. But if he be elected by reason of a large country vote of the third or so-called people's party that political influence will have to be accorded a place in all political calculations. That organization figures appreciably nowhere else in the fall elections The elections of Tuesday next are expected to indicate very much of what the presidential election next year will more definitely settle.

There is a strange contradiction of testimony before the court of inquiry that is investigating the loss of the Despatch, and the problem that is presented is a difficult one. The entire company of the ill-fated ship swears that there was but one light showing when the vessel struck, and that it was red. It was afterward found to be the light on Assateague Island, and it was thought from its color and from the absence of any other light to be that on Winter Quarter shoal. A chart that is carefully plotted by an outside party shows that the Despatch must have passed nearly over the station of the latter light, which was located on a schooner. Thus the testimony of the ship's company is all to the effect that there was either no schooner there that night or that she was showing no light, either case being a source of great danger. On the other hand, the naval secretary of the light house board offers evidence to show that though the schooner did go adrift later on it was on its station on the night of the disaster and showing its light, visible for eight miles or more. This contradiction should be cleared up by the court of inquiry and the responsibility for the mistake in the lights fixed beyond a question. The preponderance of testimony so far introduced would indicate that the officers of the Despatch were the victims of a natural mistake.

Geological problems are a long time in the process of solution, and so do not have that in tense human interest that social, political and other problems have, but the scientific mind never staggers at delays and is undeterred by the fact that indefinite and incalculable time is involved in the process. But scientific become every day interest when the operations of busi-ness are immediately concerned. Changes in the two lower of the great lakes indicating that the water was becoming shallow were noticed first in 1838. Since that time considerable although gradual changes have occurred. The average depth of the shallowest of these lakes. Lake Erie, is only 120 feet, and continued decrease of depth would be a serious matter within an appreciable time. The larger and deeper lakes show no change of importance and Prof. Selwyn, who has been interviewed o the subject, thinks it may be millions of years before they will seriously be affected. The origin of the shallowness is the increased drift of silt caused by deforesting and the rapid volume of the floods that pour into the basis of the great lakes. The result is seen already in the delay of boats on the canals, owing to the lowness of the water. This is a problem that primarily concerns the Canadian public but one which has its interest on this side the St. Lawrence. The remedy would seem to be to stop the cutting of trees and to repair the waste already made, so as to prevent the wash from the streams of supply and the filling up of the bed of the lakes with ailt.

The Tennessee miners' outbreak is the seque of the non-action of the legislature at its called session in the matter of the leased convicts Of course there is no defense of the course of the miners in taking arms and firebrands against the law of the land, human life and private property. The affair is serious indeed when the number of dead and wounded is con sidered, although open-handed resistance to law is, alone, a grave matter. The trouble with this Tennessee convict-lease business is that without radical change in the laws the friction will increase until neither life nor property will be safe at any time anywhere in the region affected. Both seem to be very in-

Immigration to this republic shows a steady and even rapid tendency to increase. According to the latest official figures the number of immigrants for September, 1891, was 52,706 against 45,478 for the same period, 1890. For the previous nine months, 1891, the total number was 469,276, while for the nine months be fore September 30, 1890, it was only 381,399. It is interesting to know that about one-fourth of the immigrants are from Great Britain and Ireland, while Germany furnishes about onefifth, Russia and Poland send nearly one fourth, Sweden and Norway 5,031 and Italy 2,561 during the last month reported.

MONDAY'S BILL OF FARE

THE PALAIS ROYAL

Experience has taught us, and Monday's Bill of Pare thoroughly. We hesitate as to whether an apology to due some of our patrons who attended the late October series of special sales. If this catches the eye of any one of those who called late in the day only to be die our buyers that the quantities no mean quantities of productived at the special prices were as stated in our advertisements. Do our disappointed visitors "Yast and furious" that the supply was insufficient! Perhaps it is due. We apologize for not making better arrangements for the comfort of the crowds of visitors
